RESEARCH EXPERIENCE

2025 –

Specters of Coal: Haunted Cultural Landscapes in the Coalfields of Southern West Virginia

Doctoral Dissertation, The Ohio State University, Advisor: Dr. Anna Willow

- Currently in development; pre-dissertation fieldwork began June 2025
- Examines themes of abandonment, grief, loss, identity, belonging, and place attachment in a region which has been rapidly degraded by mountaintop removal mining and other forms of extractive industry
- Critically analyzes the role of mountaintop removal mining practices in changes to residents' relationships to landscape, labor, economy, and environment through collaborative, engaged ethnography

2023 –

From Social Potential to Ecological Resilience: Panarchy and Imaginaries in the Kelp Forests of the Salish Sea

Undergraduate Honors Thesis, Franklin University, Advisor: Dr. Marnie Shaffer

- Designed and conducted an ethnographic study including semi-structured interviews, participant observation, and extensive, multidisciplinary literature review
- Coded and analyzed qualitative data using MaxQDA and applied social-ecological systems theory, resilience theory & Panarchy to the northwest Washington conservation community to better understand the likelihood of success in restoring and conserving Salish kelp populations

Neighborhood Necropolitics: Housing Precarity, Homelessness, and the Integrated Spectacle in Bellingham, Washington

Social Sciences Capstone, Franklin University, Advisor: Dr. Annie Lee

- Designed and conducted a quantitative comparative analysis of several factors contributing to homelessness and housing precarity on a national scale

- Interviewed City Councilmembers as well as both housed and unhoused community members about housing concerns in Bellingham, Washington
- Analyzed the nexus of potential factors and localized Bellingham's housing & homelessness crisis through the lens of Mbembe's 'necropolitics'
